Dear Colleagues:

Welcome to “Fabulous Las Vegas” – a true oasis in the desert that, in times past, had served as the perfect ‘rest stop’ for Spanish travelers on the Old Spanish Trail heading north and west from Texas. Areas of the Las Vegas valley contained artesian wells that supported extensive green areas or meadows. One could argue that Las Vegas exists because it provided the crucial nourishment to those passing through her lands.

The IAIDQ hopes to provide the ‘nourishment’ you may be seeking in your efforts to begin, continue, and/or improve information quality throughout your own organizations and in society as a whole. This year’s conference is ripe with tutorials, presentations, and many, many opportunities for sharing experiences, from informal gatherings and receptions, to Communities of Practice sessions.

If you’re not already a member of the IAIDQ, please feel free to come and speak to other members at any one of our networking opportunities, or to Board members at our table in the exhibition hall about the benefits of becoming a member.

I hope you enjoy the conference, and remember that in the case of information quality, what happens in Vegas does not necessarily have to stay in Vegas.

Enjoy!
